As an HSE officer the role focuses on protecting workers equipment and the working environment through strong safety leadership and continuous monitoring. The officer ensures that all activities follow safety rules, company policies and legal requirements while promoting a positive safety culture at all levels. Incident reporting is a key responsibility where unsafe events, near misses and hazardous conditions are identified, recorded and communicated to management for corrective action. Accident reporting involves detailed investigation of injuries, property damage or operational failures to find root causes and prevent recurrence. Safety checks are carried out daily to identify risks related to tools, machinery, work areas and work practices. These checks help ensure safe conditions before work begins. Daily toolbox talks are conducted to brief workers on job hazards, control measures and safe work procedures, encouraging open communication and worker involvement. Auditing is performed to review compliance with safety systems, procedures and standards, highlighting gaps and recommending improvements. Vehicle inspection is another important duty, ensuring company vehicles are safe, roadworthy and properly maintained to reduce transport related risks. Worker training is organized to improve skills, knowledge and safe behavior, ensuring workers understand procedures, emergency response and use of personal protective equipment. Worker awareness sessions are conducted regularly to reinforce safety messages, increase hazard awareness and build responsibility among workers. Overall, the HSE officer plays a critical role in reducing incidents, improving safety performance and supporting a safe, healthy and productive workplace.
